

Beyond Capital Fund

Beyond Capital invests in social enterprises perceived by those outside the market to carry higher risk than these companies actually bear and that find they cannot raise funding from the local ecosystem because there is not sufficient capital available (as such, these social enterprises face the so-called “capital gap”). A 2014 study by Bridges Ventures and the African Private Equity and Venture Capital Association indicated that lack of access to seed finance ($10,000 - $100,000) to develop business models to a stage where they are ready to take on investment and scale their operations is common for impact-driven social enterprises in Africa.
